4. Saturday, October 24, 2010 The Ethicist and the Waiter Over at the 11-11 blog, Matt Zwolinski discusses what to do when a waiter keeps looking at your plate in a somewhat creepy manner. Several years back, I had a similar situation. I was on vacation in Portland with a few friends, and happened to dine at a restaurant where the waitress with whom I was speaking was serving us. As she placed my soup and salad down on the table, she paused, looked up and gave me what I can only describe as a leer. I made eye contact with her for a moment or so, and then she gave my plate a little more attention before going on to the next table. The incident had not registered on my mind much at the time. It is only at the moment, sitting here with the The Ethicist, that I realize what she meant to me when she behaved that way. To place a leer on a stranger's table is to acknowledge that you are on neutral turf--and this person is stepping onto your turf. So I see your lot in life, and the knowledge
