Python: creating a hash value using datetime I want to create a hash value using datetime value. int value I can get the int value using x=time.mktime(dt.datetime.utcnow().timestamp()) But how to get the dt.datetime object. Do I need to create datetime object to get dt.datetime? A: Yes, you need to convert the time.mktime() to a datetime object. time.mktime() returns a datetime object with the same value as mktime(). It doesn't require you to provide an object to convert a datetime into. This is the relevant part of documentation which should be read to clearly understand this. datetime.datetime.fromtimestamp() Return the datetime from the supplied timestamp, since the epoch, ignoring the microseconds. You can use this as is, but you probably want to use int(time.mktime(dt.datetime.utcnow().timestamp())) so that's why in your code you are doing time.mktime(dt.datetime.utcnow().timestamp()).
